FORM A RIFLE CLUB.

Arrangements have been made to hold a meeting of those interested in the formation of a rifle club in Crossfield on Saturday afternoon 29th inst. at 2 p. m. in Bishop's hall. The service roll and other papers necessary have been received from the Government and several have already signified their intention of joining. It is hoped that all interested in such a club will endeavor to attend the meeting. The Government supply rifles and ammunition and no doubt when the club is formed shooting will become a popular pastime.

OUR NEW BUTCHER.

Mr. D. A. MacCrimmon has opened an up-to-date butcher shop in the building next to Hultgren & Davie's Land Office. The place has been nicely fitted up and the latest style of computing scales put in. Mr. S. Timmins has taken charge of this branch of the business and has in a fine selection of canned goods, ham, bacon, mutton and beef. It is intended to have mutton on sale regularly and hams will be sold sliced or in pieces. No doubt this new venture will receive liberal support.

THE HOG QUESTION.

To the Editor—

Dear Sir—There has been considerable discussion about the raising of pork the price paid for it live weight and prices on hawker's scale raised, also about more pork packing establishments. Well sir, the price paid to the farmers for his hogs live weight say it averages $6.50 and the price he can get for his grain he feeds his pigs, and he comes out of it with the price of his grain but not anything for his time and trouble in raising and feeding them. At the price this salt pork is he should get at least 10c. live weight and that is his share of the profit. He has all the trouble for 6 or 10 months and the pork packing establishments get all the profit and are not out of their money one month or need not be. Now, sir, the farmers of this country should see all the pork packing establishments standing idle before they allow themselves to be flooded like this are. With him there is nothing he does but he gets some returns for his labor but pork and all the profits goes to the pork packing establishment.

It has been reported that P. Burns has said that he don't see what they need any more pork packing establishments for; that there is not enough raised to keep his packing house going. Let P. Burns just take a reasonable profit and give the farmer his just profit his packing house would be kept running night and day. A pork packing establishment is one of the greatest grafting businesses in the Dominion and why a farmer continues to raise pork for the bare price of the grain it takes, is a mystery. We raised 60 this year and got the price of the grain for them and have stopped until there is a large dividend of the profit for the farmer. If this was done by every farmer we would soon get some of the profits where now it all goes to the packers. Either stop raising pork or salt it and sell it cured.

OLD GUN FOUND.

A remarkable old muzzle-loading flint lock gun was found this week under a clump of bushes on his place by Mr. Blough, 9 miles west. The maker's name and date—"Barnett 1861"—are on the gun. BOGUS STOCK FOOD.

A bill has been passed by the Canadian Parliament which is designed to protect the farmers of Canada from fraudulent manufacturers of stock food of which, it is said, hundreds upon hundreds of thousands of dollars worth are sold annually. By the new measure manufacturers or their agents must take out licences and have a registered number. The package of fertilizer must show the ingredients and guaranteed value. The stock foods must also show analysis of the food product. If the farmer suspects the quality of the fertilizer or cattle food he can send a sample to the Inland Revenue Department and have it analysed for the fee of one dollar.

It was shown by those who urged the passage of the bill that the stock foods were composed of finely ground chaff, corn cobs, cut hulls and saw dust, and in some cases peat and peat moss, highly scented with drugs. The manufacturers, it was shown, often got as high as $400 a ton, while the cost was not more than $3.

Special attention was given in the case of the International Stock Food Company, whose stock food is said to have been found on analysis to be a very low value in comparison with its price. In reference to this company the Dominion chemist says:

"The factories are situated in Minneapolis, where there are large flour mills and necessarily a tremendous amount of refuse, and waste products accumulate. This is largely used, no doubt, in the compounding of the feed. The sale of this feed is tremendous and all sorts of schemes are employed to advertise it, for the profits are large. It is difficult to understand why farmers will persist in buying these continental foods, especially when their nature has been made public in our reports and the agricultural press."—Commercial.

Farmers that were in too great a hurry to plow up or resow their winter crops in 1907 were sorry for it afterwards. One man we know of started to plow his up, and did half a day's plowing, but was called away on urgent business and did not return for a week. When he did return the field was green and the wheat growing well. Another farmer we know left his crop, but in June being dissatisfied with it, turned his stock into the wheat to eat it off, but in July he took the stock out and then told us he would get 10 bushels per acre. Later he raised his opinion to 15 bushels per acre, but when the crop was harvested, he averaged 25 bushels to the acre or over. Don't be in too great a hurry to plow winter wheat.

FORESTRY REPORT.

The 1908 report of the Superintendent of Forestry for the Dominion, Mr. R. H. Campbell, lately issued, draws much attention to the Dominion forest reserves, situated in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and the railway belt in British Columbia. The largest of these, the Riding Mountain reserve, is most fully treated. During the year reported on (1907) the fire protective system on this reserve (along with the Duck Mountain and the Porcupine reserves) had been organized by the appointment of a chief ranger, who has assistant rangers. The timber survey of this reserve is now practically completed. The reserve also occupies an important place in regard to the water supply of the country to the east and south. An evidence of this is the granting to the Minneapolis Power Co., of Minnesota, Man., of permission to erect a dam on Clear Lake, which is within the reserve, in order to control the waters of the Little Saskatchewan and make them serviceable for the production of power. Another problem engaging the attention of the authorities is the protection of the game in the reserve.

In the case of the Moose Mountain reserve, in southern Saskatchewan, the most important problem is that of its protection against fire. Another problem of importance to the reserve is that of its use as a summer resort; the shore of Fish Lake is especially well suited for this. The authorities now have under consideration the granting of sites for camping by lease or otherwise.

Opposite the town of Prince Albert, on the north shore of the Saskatchewan river, a tract of land has been recommended to be set aside for a forest reserve. The Irrigation convention, in session at Calgary in July, 1907, passed a resolution asking that a forest reserve be created on the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains for the sake of its beneficial effect on the conservation of the rainfall in that district.

TIMBER REGULATIONS

The report gives in full the amended timber regulations adopted in December, 1907. These provide, in brief, that all timber is to be sold by public auction at the office of the timber agent for the district, after each berth has been surveyed and has been examined by a competent cruiser. Taking as a basis the survey report submitted by the cruiser, as to the quantity and value of the timber, the Minister of the Interior then fixes an upset price for the berth.

FIRE RANGING

Forty-seven fire rangers were employed during 1907, patrolling the forest reserves and forested districts. Of these 21 were in B. C. Railway Belt; 7 on the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains (from the International Boundary north to the Saskatchewan River), 5 in the Edmonton district, 7 in the Prince Albert district and two along the Athabaska River from Athabaska Landing to Lake Athabaska. In the Lesser Slave Lake district and also along the line of the C. N. R. from Erwood to The Pass rangers were kept.

The report calls attention to the great risk of forest fires along the proposed line of the G. T. P. Ry. during its construction. Newspaper reports of wide-spread forest fires during the spring of 1908 had not, however, been officially confirmed. The need of adequate fire protection for the forests north of the Saskatchewan River, from Hudson Bay to the Rockies, is also pointed out.

TREE DISTRIBUTION

Suggestions are made for improvements at the Nursery Station at Indian Head. Mr. N. M. Ross, in his report as chief of the Division of Tree Planting, which is published as an appendix to the report of the Superintendent, announces the distribution of over 1,700,000 trees in the spring of 1908. The number of applicants for trees for distribution in 1908 was 1424 of whom 464 were from Manitoba, 659 from Saskatchewan and 301 from Alberta.

Irrigation now forms an important part of the work of the Forestry Branch. Among the subjects discussed under this head are the need of a hydrographic survey, the Irrigation Act, the first Canadian Irrigation Convention and the "duty of water" and its determination.

NATIONAL PARKS

During the year the Dominion National Parks were taken over by the branch and their administration organized. Elk Park was fenced, in order to confine the Buffalo and a new park—Buffalo Park—set aside.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

Many people prefer theoretical to practical work, but they don't like to take their pay that way.

Getting out into the sunlight of social intercourse and getting your disposition tanned is recommended for mental health.

When a man discovers an affinity for a careful examination into his business affairs is apt to disclose some crookedness there also.

Truth is stranger than fiction and often quite as dangerous.

When a girl has freckles, a snub nose and a dimple in her chin she doesn't have to care whether you like her or not. There are others.

There are men who would really choose to be successful liars, so many avenues would then be open to them.

It is queer, but there are men who seem to prefer to spend the income of a large fortune in dodging the government's requisition.

You will generally find that the man who is always useful around the house confines the sphere of his activities to the same place.

A woman doesn't always cry when she has to any more than she always doesn't smile when she can't.

The reason any girl can fool any man is because the man first fools himself about the girl every time.

Don't be afraid until you have reason to be so and proceed to remove the reason with great celerity.

When there is no room or time to be anything else, it is then wise and commendable to be patient.

Its Main Attraction.
September is a merry month.
With all its golden days.
Its Indian summer colors bright
Beneath the autumn haze.
But it has many other charms
The thoughtful ones to win.
For, oh, September has an R.
Which lets the oyster in.

Since April last we had to eat
Most any kind of food.
And hard at times it was to get
Good action on our cash.
True, there was summer grub enough
For cream and other drinks.
Unless we slipped and took the kind
They order up with wine.
And there was fish and fancy fruits
And beef, embalmed or plain.
And many forms of breakfast food
Formed from nutritious grain.
But there was always something shy
The pleasant taste to mar.
For not a single summer month
Is fitted with an R.

Bring out the fruits of Baltimore
On half shell and on ice.
And let us start the banquet right
Regardless of the price.
And follow with a stew or fry
Or just a scallop plain.
A generous helping for each plate,
And let us live again.

Simple Duties.
CHORUS—WEDD!

"What is the business of the quartetmaster?"
"To look after the quarters for the regiment, I suppose."
"But who looks after the dimes, half dollars and dollars? Surely, the man; comes to them in their different denominations."

Basting a Retreat.
"What is necessary when you wish to best a retreat?" asked an old military man at Fort Washington.
"I suppose you'd have to retreat faster than the other fellows," was the reply that came after some deliberation.

It Had a Charm.
"I do miss Mrs. Jones. She told me all the news of the parish."
"Oh, that was only gossip—no truth in it."

"Well, there, I liked to 'ear it. Truth or lies, 'twas all news to me."—Punch.

"You seem pretty confident," observed Gibbs.

"Confident? Why not? Why not, I ask you? Why wouldn't I be confident? Is there a voter in the ward—black, white, yellow or greenish—who I can't call by his first name and ask after all his children by name? Is there a voter in the ward who I haven't asked in coal or outings or hall or house? Is there? If so, name him to me. Put a name to him. They're my friends a twelve months of every year, not just at election time. Horrigan, indeed! Say, if he starts running again in my ward he'll have to fight him with a tree to see if he's making any progress or not. Horrigan, hey?"

"Come, come, alderman," interposed Wainwright. "Why don't you and Horrigan smoke the pipe of peace? Why?"

"The only pipe me an' Dick Horrigan will ever come together over will be a yard of lead pipe, an' my fist will be at one end of that an' his thick head at the other."

"But," remonstrated Wainwright, "is a strong man. Is it safe to fight him?"

"Why isn't it? He's got to come into the Eighth to lick me, and he'll be about as strong there as a barkeep's influence with the Protection party, besides, I like a fight. I'm the original 'Stop, look and listen' signal at Trouble station. I'm—"

"As a personal favor to me, alderman," wheedled Mr. Wainwright in his most persuasive manner, "won't you make a friend of Horrigan?"

"I'd gladly oblige you by making a fine, fashionable, rakish funeral of him, but friends—friends—"

"Minors' claim of a meet by Phelan?"

"But I—ask him to be cordial to him?"

"I sure would—as cordial as a bankrupt to a rent collector. He'd be as pretty near as welcome as a broken leg."

"I'm sorry you look at it that way, alderman, because I've asked him to."

"To come here? Quit your job!"

"But he doesn't know he'll see you."

"An' he'll never find out for I'm on my way. I'd sooner meet a pirate from the 't' contagion hospital."

"Of course, if you're really afraid of him."

"Afraid of him?" sneered Phelan, coming to a full stop at the door and then returning to the middle of the room. "Afraid of Dick Horrigan? Show me the man I'm afraid to meet and I'll meet him with pleasure just to show you it's a lie."

"Mr. Horrigan" came the butler's announcement from the threshold.

The man who followed the announcement was one who carried in his hand the chief reasons for his success. Tall, stout, square of jaw, square of brow, hard of mouth, and with a dominating face of every kind, he dominated his very surroundings and to exhaled a rough forcefulness that carried all before it. His physiognomy was essentially that of the horn fighter as well as leader—the man that never gives nor asks quarter.

From the days when as a ferry ticket seller he was in the habit of taking the fare from the passengers' pockets, he had followed the same line of advancement, and he had followed the same line of advancement, and he had followed the same line of advancement.

It could not be said of Richard Horrigan that his morals were bad. He simply had no morals at all. By contrast with one of higher culture than this, he had no sense of the propriety and vulgarity of speech. His directness and vulgarity of manner he had no sense of. It was by far too valuable an asset.

"Good morning, Mr. Wainwright," began Horrigan, with a breezy familiarity, as he stepped into the library, quite unabashed at finding himself in the presence of the dreaded chairman. "I'm a bit ahead of time, but I've stopped short, with a grunt of rage. He eyes had fallen on Phelan. Bristling like a plucky terrier at the back of a mastiff, the alderman stood on the ground, giving the boss glare for glare.

And so for a moment the enemies faced each other.

CHAPTER III.

HORRIGAN was first to break the tense silence.

"What's this here for?" he growled, indicating Phelan with a contemptuous jerk of the head and without so much as a glance at the other.

"Ask your friend Wainwright," grunted Phelan, with equal roughness. "I—you see," began Wainwright, hesitatingly, "I don't like to see two such first rate chaps at odds with each other, so I wanted to bring you to—"

"Oh, you did," said Horrigan, sneering. "And what did Phelan say to that little plan?"

"I said," snarled Phelan before his host could reply—"I said I'd see you in—first!"

"I guess here, twice over!" said Horrigan.

"Rug," interposed Wainwright coaxingly, "is there no way?"

"No," retorted Horrigan, his deep voice rumbling far down in his throat. "There isn't. Look here, Phelan! I'm not for your scalp, and I'm going to get it!"

"Come on, look for it!" crowed Phelan, fairly popping up and down in rage and excitement.

"An' while you're bustin' my scalp don't overlook one bit. I'm after yours!"

"Mine, you little shrimp! Why—"

"Yes, yours, Horrigan, you car. You're pretty cheery an' strong standin' on the top of the organization, but you're no bloomin' statue of liberty. You can be torn down, and here's the man who's got to do the tearing."

"Mr. Alderman Jimmy Phelan of the Eighth!"

"Let it go at that for now. You'll wake up in the fall, when the election—"

"Let it go at that for keeps. I'm—"

"Mr. Wainwright," broke off Horrigan, "if you're bustin' my scalp, you wanted to talk over with me here!"

"It isn't!" asserted the thoroughly uncomfortable financier.

"Oh! Then we can get down to real business perhaps when this fellow's gone."

"Let's let me out," observed Phelan cheerfully as he picked up his hat.

"I'm a member, but I don't mind it."

"But you'll stay to lunch, alderman, won't you?" urged Horrigan, with an effort at cordiality that decided no one.

"No, thanks," replied Phelan. "When the curate's done with the organ, I guess home I don't need no usher to poke me in the ribs to tell me the show's out. As for stayin' to break bread with Dick Horrigan, I should have a jolly little grub fest with Willey's poison squad. Goodby, al! Horrigan, for you, some day, I'll cross two sticks of dynamite under you, you'll scatter so wide that the inquest over your political remains will have to be held in fourteen counties."

"I am so sorry, Mr. Horrigan, that this should have happened in my house," said Wainwright as the rude alderman stalked out, leaving his host staring after him in dumb fury. "I meant it for the best and—"

"Mr. Wainwright," interrupted Horrigan, venting his pent-up wrath on his dismayed host. "This old world of ours is white with bones of failures, of fools, of deadbeats. In other words, of folks who meant it for the best. Now let's get down to business."

"First let me introduce Mr. Gibbs. He—"

"Glad to meet him, but he'll excuse me when I say I never talk business when there's a third party around. No offense, Mr. Gibbs. Just walk out and take a look at the view, like a good boy, won't you?"

Gibbs, at a warning look of appeal from Wainwright, checked the angry retort that sprang to his lips, turned on his heel and walked out. Horrigan, who had observed the glance exchanged between the two men, grudgingly admitted to soften the effect of his brusqueness.

"I didn't mean to snub your friend," said he, "but Phelan riled me, and I took it out on the next man I spoke to. What on earth set you to having Phelan here to meet me for, anyway?"

"Just as I said, I wanted to win him over to us. We will need every strong man we can get this fall. We—"

"You know a lot about finance, Mr. Wainwright. But you're a rank outsider in politics or you never have made such a break. I can't compromise with Phelan even if I wanted to. He's stood out against me, and I've got to smash him. If he could defy me and get away with it, other leaders would think they could do it, too, and I'd be down and out. Under such a piece of white cloth can be tacked to the floor at the foot of the stairs. See that the sticking is securely done, or a worse fall may follow than from a mislaid step—Philosophy Press."

get to business. What?"

"But business seemed this morning laid to many interruptions. The latest came in the form of Judge Newman, who, busting into the room with all his usual pompous dignity, suddenly stopped in the tracks and, snarling at sight of the boss, waited at sight of the boss."

"Good morning, Mr. Horrigan," said the judge ingratiatingly, wringing under the boss' glover. "I hope I'm not here too early and that Mr. Wainwright has not yet spared yourself the trouble. What I told you before still goes."

"But, Mr. Horrigan, consider how long I've been on the bench, and—"

"And it's time you got your nose out of the feed bag and gave some one else a chance. You are—"

"I'm growing old, Mr. Horrigan," pleaded the thoroughly cowed judge. "How can I go back to law practice and compete with younger men? Besides, Mr. Newman declares—"

"I can't help that," returned Horrigan, who was not to be so easily thrown. "We've got to look out for our own active workers—for the men we can count on to do the right thing."

"But, Mr. Horrigan," protested the judge, "I always try to do what is right."

"I said the right thing," corrected the boss. "See the difference?"

"Excuse me, judge," intervened Wainwright. "If you'll leave this matter in my hands, I will try to convince Mr. Horrigan of your fitness. Just leave it all to me."

"Oh, thank you so much, Charles," cried the relieved judge. "I'm sure I can count on you. Mr. Newman will be so grateful. Well, I won't detain you any longer. Goodby."

"Goodby, judge," answered Wainwright tolerantly.

"Goodby, Mr. Horrigan," went on Judge Newman, with effusion.

A grunt from Horrigan, who had turned his broad back on the visitor, was the only reply, and the judge departed to bear the message of hope to Mr. Newman.

"Have you any special objections to Newman?" asked Wainwright.

"No," said Horrigan, "except I think perhaps there's men who can do better by us. You know how much I've seen sometimes have the right judge handle your case?"

"I'm a member, but I don't mind it."

"Oh, it's a favor to you, al! right. But it doesn't do those judiciary fellows any harm to keep them guessing while, if they're not sure, they're to mind—sort of keeps them in their places."

Great White Plague on the Increase

Washington.—That the vigorous campaign against tuberculosis has failed to check the great white plague was the startling charge made by Nathan Strauss, the New York philanthropist, at the fifth annual meeting of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis.

Mr. Strauss supported his assertion by official statistics from the New York health department, showing an increase of 33 per cent. in two years in cases of tuberculosis in the city.

Dr. Koch described as leading the whole world in the fight against the disease. The reason of this failure to make headway, Mr. Strauss declared, was the neglect of the mischief wrought by the tuberculosis dairy cows. Citing the results of scientific investigation and his own 18 years' experience in saving lives, he summed up by saying that the abolition of tuberculosis will begin when it is a crime to sell milk unless it comes from tuberculosis-tested cows or has been properly pasteurized.

"But, Mr. Horrigan, consider how long I've been on the bench, and—"

POINTS FOR THE HORSEMAN.

Concerning brood mares, there is no danger of working them in foal provided they are properly handled, says a writer in the Breeder's Gazette, Chicago.

A mare will be better if worked and will produce more vigorous foals. However, judgment should be exercised in working mares heavy in foal. They should not be required to haul heavy loads over muddy roads or work in the field where they would be required to turn in soft, sticky ground, as they might strain themselves and cause serious injury. The man who uses more than one team on his farm can easily give the lighter work to the mares in foal and in this manner get substantially the same work out of them as any other team.

It is not a good plan to turn mares in the pasture with other horses when heavy in foal unless they are known to get along with them. A kick may kill a colt. Brood mares need about the same feed as other horses, but when nursing foaling time it is better not to feed much corn or other heating food, as well as other horses, should be kept in good condition.

AMERICAN BEEF TRUST

BRITISH MARKET SAID TO BE IN GRIP OF OCTOPUS

beef trust is coiling its tentacles around the British market and also gaining control of the United Kingdom's great source of meat supply. Argentina, is expressed in a government report recently made public. The report is submitted by the departmental committee that was appointed in 1908 to investigate the meat trade at home and abroad, especially with relation to combinations among packers and shippers.

Most of the trails the committee found led them across the Atlantic

Chicago. Volumes of testimony were amassed with the aid of witnesses gathered from all parts of the world and special investigators, secret and otherwise, were sent abroad to run down every feature of the inquiry upon which first hand information was desired.

"It is almost incredible that Armour & Co., Morris & Co., and the Hammond Beef Co., the last named representing the National Packing Co., should be in combination in the United States and in competition in the United Kingdom."

The report asserts positively the belief of the committee that a beef trust

Chicago companies named are its components. Also, it says, the same four companies are allied in such a manner in England that they may eventually gain absolute control of the Smithfield market itself. Deep concern is also expressed lest the grip of the American meat trust on the Argentine market will become so strong as to put British shipments from that country completely in their hands to the detriment of the English imports.

STATISTICS IN MEDICINE

OLD REMEDIES RETAIN THEIR POPULARITY

Investigations of French Physicians Show that Large Production of Synthetic Medicines is Not Crowding Out the Old Favorites.

A late despatch from Paris says:— Prof. Grimbart presented a notable paper before the Academy of Medicine on therapeutic tendencies in the last ten years. Having his figures on medicines furnished to 219 large apothecaries and hospitals by the State Pharmacy, he finds that the old-fashioned medicines retain their popularity.

An expert authority on being interviewed states that the tendencies
of the medical profession in Canada
are along exactly the same lines.
He gives the following statistics on vegetable mixture as the safest and best treatment for all stomach and liver troubles, constipation. Take one teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime.
This acts in a pleasant way, and is free from the bad effects of strong purgatives and synthetics.
We advise all our readers to put
this valuable formula out and use it.
Any druggist can supply these ingredients at a small expense. You can mix them at home if you prefer.

The Picture and the Lover

By LESTER GREY.

Copyright, 1906, by Associated Literary Press.

To begin with, she was not a mother, but it had pleased the young artist to give the picture that name because it was his ideal of what his mother
would have been if she had lived.
In real life she was a quiet little person, just over the brow of the highway of years, journeying softly, placidly down the smooth path, for the winter of existence lay hidden beyond turns in the road, and she had not glimped it yet.

It was not one of the large canvases of the exhibition, nor was it hung in the most desirable lights reserved for the great, yet it was well placed, for Desha, Carol, though young, had in a measure been recognized, and there were people of distinction who looked for his work.
The composition had been cleverly conceived. It showed a veranda corner of what was evidently an old ruin
of a country house, with a country gate. The big French window, the half of an old colonial pillar and a general air of shabby gentility made a fitting frame for the sweet faced woman who sat in the modern velvet
porch chair, a magazine on her lap,
who looked straight out of the picture.

To one content to revel in the delight of it all it showed a happy mother or speaking to some stalwart son who had brought her good news or perhaps just himself with a hearty greeting of love.

To the critic who sought to know
why it pleased him the greatest charm seemed to be in the eyes. Carol had done wonders there, and they seemed to carry a message of a mother love that had known no anxieties, no sleepless nights of wondering where some wandering boy was resting and praying that God might watch over him.
They were big, brown, expressive eyes, with the slightest suggestion of

"Why, yes, naturally, I painted it."
"You are Mr. Carroll, then?"
"You are Mr. Carroll, then?"
"You are Mr. Carroll, then?"

"Well, you know we artists have to live. Few of us paint for fame alone, as to it is like the rest. Only I hope it goes to some one who will appreciate it. The circumstances of its painting are dear memories."

"Are you—are you her son? Tell me!" And the questioner put a trembling hand on the artist's shoulder.

"No," replied Carroll. "I wish I was,
or, rather, if my own mother had lived
I think she would have been like her."

"Can you spare me the time to tell me the circumstances that speak that is, if you will? Thank you, but not here. Let us go to my house. I live near."

"It isn't much of a story except in its personal appeal to me," began Carroll
a few moments later. "But I presume it reminds you of some one, and if the two women are alike I know you understand how fond I am of her."

"Last spring I was threatened with fever and was told to get out of the city. I found a quiet place owned by the original of the portrait, and she took me in. Unfortunately I did not escape soon enough, and fever caught me. There was no one with her but an old servant, and I asked him to come into the conservatory."

"She would not hear of it and nursed me on a journey to death's door and back again to the sunshine of the trees and the birds and life. It is something that one cannot explain—her tenderness, her motherliness and the sense of comfort, of love, even, for a stranger that she gave me."

"Her entrance would light up my sketchbook; her presence was sweeter
than all the medicine in the world.
Frankly, she is the dearest, sweetest woman I have ever known. I was only two when my mother died."

"That about all, I think," said
"Mr. Carroll," his host began. "I have never met you, but perhaps know
you. I am Judge John Jones Carter, and I am from Virginia. When I was a boyed young man I was in with a girl who is probably the double of the lady in your picture. I loved her devotedly, madly, sir, and she loved me. But I was headstrong, sir, and I quarrelled with her one night
and came home."

"All my life the years have been loves except my love for her. Three, four, five years passed, and I knew she was probably married, so I have never inquired, but the picture, sir, brought all back to me, all the love I have missed that might have been covered with happiness, for they would have been happy ones. Mr. Carroll, sir, she was the finest girl on earth. Now you know why I want to buy your picture and—"

"Judge Carter, there can be no talk of buying and selling that picture after what you have told me. There, there:
no one else will get it. The exhibition will last another month. You can get back from Albemarle county before that."

"What are you saying, boy? Albemarle county? Why, that's where I lived. Is it hurt? Is she a widow?
Is she free, and is it—"

"Both questions, sir, she is not a widow," said Carroll quietly. "She has never married."

"Honest, boy? Honest? Forgive me, forgive me Mr. Carroll. Then she didn't forget?"

"She is the sort who love once—for always, I think," and Carroll extended his hand.

"And the picture?" asked the judge.
"Will be my wedding present?"

"God bless you, sir, God bless you,"
and there were tears in his eyes as he showed Carroll to the door.

Carroll is famous now and a few years older. Ask him the best thing he ever did and he will tell you "Mother." Perhaps you won't understand him, but Judge Carter knows,
and Mrs. Johnson Lee Carter shares
the knowledge.

The Masterpieces.
Alma Tadema, the artist, did not achieve fame at a single bound. He had a few years to make his name before he was recognized as a master of ability. In his student days one of his unsuccessful pictures was returned unsold by the committee of the Brussels exhibition of 1850. The subject was a house on fire, says the Associated Press Magazine.

It was of a title against the stupidity or favoritism of the committee
the artist asked his fellow students into his studio and invited them to jump through the canvas. He led the way by leaping head first through the oldest flames.

A second unsuccessful effort was a large sized square picture that came back again and again to its creator's eyes until at last he reworked himself upon it in a novel way by cutting the picture out of its frame and giving it to an old woman to use as a table cover.

There was some one at last to appreciate its excellence. The next time Alma Tadema made the old woman she told him that it was a masterpiece
than those common old-fashioned things.
They always let the water through,"
she explained, "but that one of yours is a good thick one, with plenty of paint on it."

WEIGHT OF A HORSE.

Bad Guesses Made by Men Unskilled in Horsemanship.

Many people, even among those who frequently make use of horses, have little idea what an ordinary horse weighs and would have great difficulty to guess whether a given animal standing before their eyes weighed 500 or 1,500 pounds. Yet they would have none difficulty to guess with a man and probably be able to guess, especially if they were good Yankees, within ten or twenty pounds of his weight. The governments of Europe have long been purchasing and weighing horses for the military service and transferring them from carriage or draft employment to the various branches of cavalry and artillery. The animals are ordinarily assigned according to weight. The French military authorities find that an ordinary light carriage or riding horse, such as in the United States would be called a "good little buggy horse," weighs from 200 to 400 kilograms—say from 500 to 900 pounds.
Such horses as these are assigned to the light cavalry corps. The next grade above, which in civil life passes
as a "coupe horse," or carriage horse of medium weight, ranges in weight from 450 kilograms, about 1,000 pounds. This horse goes to help mount the cavalry of the line.

Next come the fashionable "coach horses" of persons of income, which weigh from 500 to 750 kilograms, or from 1,000 to nearly 1,500 pounds.
These horses go to serve the purpose of draft for the cavalry belonging to the reserve military forces. Above these there are still two grades of heavy horses. The first are those used for ordinary draft purposes and are commonly found drawing the communes of Paris where such vehicles are still used. These weigh from 1,100 to 1,500 pounds. The heaviest horses are the Clydesdales and Percherons, which are common in size and strength and which weigh from 600 to 800 and sometimes even up to 900 kilograms—that is, from 1,300 up to nearly 2,000 pounds. None of these Percherons of the heaviest weight are used in the military service, but some of them are commonly employed for draft and artillery purposes.

AIDED HER RIVAL.

Romance of a London Society Leader and a Diamond Necklace.

There is no need to dilate on the fascination which sweeps over the mind of the feminine mind. That fascination is a fact and may serve to explain a mortal enmity which existed recently and probably still exists between two well known society leaders.
To one of them a highly placed admirer
or mentioned his intention to purchase a diamond necklace. Knowing that the lady possessed more than a superficial knowledge of the value of stones, he sought to seduce her or him what he required. The price he was prepared to give was £12,000. The lady jumped to the conclusion that such a request could have but one meaning—viz, that she herself was to be the eventual recipient of the gift. She thereupon visited the jeweler's shop and inspected
his stock, but at the price she was empowered to give saw nothing that particularly took her fancy. A fascinating piece of jewelry, however, did attract her, the price of which was 3,000 guineas. The desire to possess it became irresistible. She arranged with the jeweler to send the necklace to the purchaser and invoice it to him at the agreed upon price, while she gave her own check for the balance. Then she went home and awaited the arrival of the gift. Some days passed, but there was no appearance of the necklace. A horrible doubt which haunted her became certainty a day or two later when she saw the identical necklace
she had helped to pay for sparkling on the finger of a younger and more beautiful rival—Grand Magazine.
